

Phillies Highest, Yankees Lowest for LCS Ticket Prices on Resale Market

Written by Maury Brown

Friday, 15 October 2010 00:50

Damn Yankees? Of the 4 LCS teams in 2010, the Bronx Bombers are posting, not the most expensive, but lowest average ticket price on the resale market. The Phillies, with Roy Halladay pitching only the second no-hitter in postseason history, are leading for most expensive resale tickets (Source: FanSnap

Some might look at these numbers and say we've entered Bizarro World. Of the four LCS teams (Phillies, Giants, Yankees, Rangers), the vaunted New York Yankees are not the highest priced tickets on the resale market, but rather the lowest of the four.

According to ticket comparison company FanSnap, at $276, the Yankees have the lowest average ticket prices for the LCS. The highest average resale ticket price goes to the Phillies ($504) followed by the Giants ($375), Rangers ($310), and then the aforementioned Yankees.

NLCS tickets, for the entire series, are averaging $447, which is 50 percent higher than the ALCS average ticket price of $298.

Phillies Highest, Yankees Lowest for LCS Ticket Prices on Resale Market

Written by Maury Brown

Friday, 15 October 2010 00:50

Phillies' ticket prices peaked at $550 for Game 5, while Yankees' prices peaked at $275 for Game 1. The Phillies' average ticket price of $447 was the highest in the LCS, while the Yankees' average ticket price of $298 was the lowest. The average ticket price for the NL was $447 and for the AL was $298.

Follow The Biz of Baseball on Twitter 